Wrongful Dismissal Lawyers Langley - You could get demoted or lose your job while your life crumbles apart with just a snap of your employees fingers. It could become extremely hard to support your family as your funds dwindle if you can't find gainful work. If this is you, it is possible that you have a wrongful dismissal situation against your boss.

Nevertheless, lets say you are an employer and you would like to fire someone but do not want to risk a lawsuit. There are several important questions that you need answered and a wrongful dismissal lawyer can help answer them.

A wrongful dismissal lawyer can provide answers as well as advice so as to help deal with your difficult situation. Our company prides itself in ensuring that your rights are protected whilst helping you attain your personal objectives.

If you go to court for a wrongful dismissal, you can be compensated by the courts for the amounts you would have received according to your prior benefits and salary. Then again, any pay or notice which you got is subtracted from the awarded amount.

It is your task to find a job once your position is terminated. The court takes into account your efforts, but would also subtract whichever salary earned during the reasonable notice period from the awarded amount.

If you were given notice less than you were entitled to, for example, the court can recompute the amount could have earned at a new job and award damages accordingly. The courts consider bonuses, pension, insurance, medical plans, moving expenses, stock options, and vacation pay when determining how much damages they should award.

In the more extreme situations, courts might compensate you for whichever kind of abuse which occurs after termination consisting of abuse, mental distress or defamation.
