Divorce Lawyer in Langley - The various levels in the BC court system will each handle different parts of family law.

Both the Provincial Family Court and the Supreme Court, interim orders for child support, custody, and access could be acquired. Typically, these orders are acquired at the start of the case, while remaining active until the proceedings have ended. Frequently, an interim order is awarded for one spouse to have complete ownership of a specific family asset. With this, the individual is ordered to either maintain possession of it or to sell the possession.

Regrettably, even with the efforts being made by the Supreme Court and the Provincial Family Court, family cases still take numerous months to end.
